The Phantom Party of the Arlington Club

With their slowy cowls and white array The phantoms flitted in merry play, In the gliding weltz and the quadrille gay,

Foft strains of dulest music fell,

They bounted halls and chambers fair, Parlors and even the winding stair; With muse and weird mysterious air

Some ghosts were short and some were tall, Some thin as air, some like a ball, But lively as a cricket, all, With phantem dancing shoes.

Some phantoms walked with tripping feet,

There was a mute and gentle pair, That haunted all the winding stair, Gazing thre' masks like lovers there,

Some giddy phantoms shook the house, Some glided softly as a mouse, And one within his ghostly blouse, Stalked like a demon dire.

Just then chimed forth the midnight bell, And as the solemn music fell The phantoms fled to Heaven or—well, To purgatory's clime.

Black eyes and orbs of blue.

Dear lassies clad in costumes bright, Laddies a dancing with glad delight, Nothing more seen of the phantoms white, In parlor or winding stair.

A lovier beyy of maideus gay Couldn't be found in the longest day, Nor a likelier set of the laddles; pray, What more could a poet want?

They wound up the dance with Virginia Reel, The house just trembled with toe and heel, But the laughter rang out with a merry peal, Then the viols and harps sang "Home." The Spruces, V4. Jan. 31, 1890.

WHALES IN CHESAPEAKE BAY .- Captain Hall of the oyster schooner Joseph Allen had a thrilling experience with whales in scheener was loaded with oysters from Pocomeke and bound to Norfolk. When off Wolf's Trap a whale was noticed spouting far off to the westward, and as monsters of this species are rarely seen in the havel! this species are rarely seen in the bay all glasses aboard were levelled where the buge range, but their alarm was greatly increased when his whaleship commenced spouting great streams high in the high. The vessel was hove to, and as many as fifteen different whales were counted. At one time there were two on both the starboard and port sides of the frail craft, and the fierce way in which they lashed the waters caused her to rock considerably. The mate of the vessel wanted to shoot one of the largest of the whales, but those on board stoutly objected,

Sturgeon, Mo. Miss White was a pretty young woman with two lovers-R. E. Lee and C. J. Winn-and both proposed. She accepted both, but finally she decided on Winn, and the day was set for the ceremony. Lee induced her to back out at the to toss a dollar, heads or tails, for the girl. She acquiseced in the plan. In a parlor full of guests the fateful dollar was tossed there. They went to housekeeping and lived together until recently, when Mrs. Lee returned to her father's house and is now suing for divorce. Mr. Winn is now her steady company and says he wil? get her
